

In just 6 days the 32nd IACA Annual Conference will begin in Denver, Colorado. I am pleased and excited to welcome you to Denver and to serve as your host for the week of the Conference.

Materials and a final agenda for the Conference have been posted on the IACA website, <http://www.iaca.org/node/128>. Those materials will also be distributed on flash-drives at the Conference. In an effort to conserve resources and reduce costs, printed materials will not be provided at the Conference. I encourage you to review the materials and print the items of interest to you.

The weather should be very nice while you're here. Expect sun and temperatures in the mid 70s. It does get cooler at night, so you may want an extra layer for going out to see Denver's beautiful and exciting downtown, where the Wild West meets the Big City.

Just a reminder, especially for some of the Conference newcomers, the typical attire for the Conference is comfortable. Some attendees dress in more business-casual for the evening receptions, and the Thursday night closing event is black-tie optional.

Please feel free to contact me if you have any questions or would like any further information. I very much look forward to seeing you in Denver!
